CUISINE OF CHENNAI

An actual South Indian person starts the day with a cup of hot filtered coffee, which is the signature beverage of the Chennai, and also of the South Indian region. Rice is the staple food of South India and this is why most of the food items are made of rice, be it the breakfast, lunch, snacks or dinner.

In breakfast, people prefer to have idli (steamed rice cakes) or dosa along with coconut chutney or tomato chutney. Both these are made from a fine paste of rice and lentils. They also like to have upma (made of rava), idiyappam or vada. In lunch, there is a variety of food including steamed rice served with sambar, rasam, kootu, buttermilk, chutney and curry. The non-vegetarian meal includes curry or dish prepared by chicken, mutton or fish. However, the lunch is incomplete without pickle, salad and papad or appalam. The snacks include chilly or onion pakoda, vada, murukku along with filtered coffee.

In most of the food items, fresh or dried curry leaves are added for a special taste and aroma. It's used widely across all of South India.

The famous sweet dishes of Chennai are payasam, kesari, sweet pongal, etc. Whereas, among the non-vegetarians, chettinad Pepper Chicken is very popular and is one of the best cuisines of the city. But what is most surprising to know is that the South Indian art of culinary is a blend of all six different tastes including sweet, salt, sour, bitter, pungent and astringent. Apart from the traditional cuisine, you will get a variety of food items from other parts of the country, including foreign cuisine

PLACES OF INTEREST

Mamallapuram

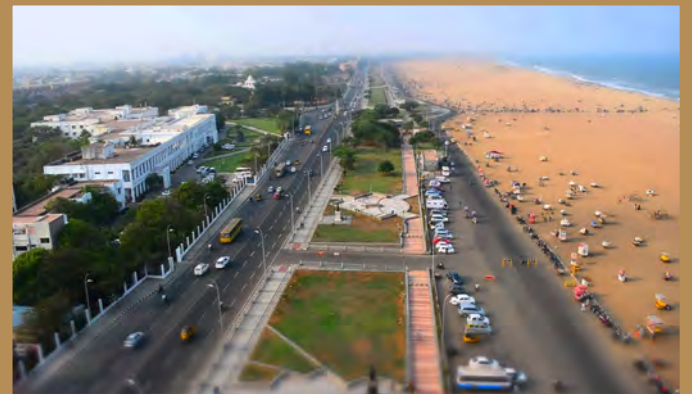

Mamallapuram, alias Mahabalipuram, a town situated in the Eastern Coast takes a 40 km journey southwards from the Venue hotel. The ancient Mamallapuram was a flourishing port town of the Pallava rulers during 7th to 9th century AD.
